Two men were visiting at The Elms!

Now, it was known that the Vanderpools were more or less connected with the great world beyond the edges of the plateau upon which Huddles-ford nested, but so far as any one could say, this was the first time that a man had visited them without the chaperonage of his wife. When, upon the first Sunday after Manticle arrival the party of four

Within the hour her importance assumed gigantic proportions. Every to the Wilson Normal School woman who had witnessed the quartet's dignified and leisurely progress, the month of December in spent the hour of prayer in devising ways and means of establishing the correctness of her surmise.

Meanwhile Rebecca was planning the retreat. They would sit still in the pew after the service was done, ostensibly to meet Dr. Manfred, and they would not leave until the congregation had gone its several ways. Thus Martin's difficult ascent of the car-riage would not be observed. Some-how, she hated to have him stared at and his infirmity made common chatter so soon.
